

The Access Project

A Final Word

A Final Word

We both started out as community-based activists over 25 years ago. We've learned a lot about how to address the obvious and visible injustices visited upon too many residents living and working in our communities.

We've worked inside governments as public policy managers. We've worked outside governments as public policy movers. We've worked alongside governments as public policy partners.

It's hard work, with long hours that most often results in an incremental improvement in the lives of fewer people than we had hoped to help. And after 25 years, we can't help but notice there are still too many in our communities who are poor, sick, underserved, undernourished, unsheltered, and uneducated.

Sometimes when we're especially tired, or a family member asks us when we're going to get a real job, we can't help but wonder if we've been in this social and economic justice business for too long.

We have to remind ourselves about how much we have accomplished: how many times we celebrated the initiation of a new government program or policy that brought real, measurable, positive change to a community or population that probably didn't even know we existed. We have to remind ourselves how many other community activists are out there working inside and outside government for better public health policies.

Producing Real Clout has been an opportunity for us to gather and document some of the best practices used by other activists winning better health policies and programs in their communities.

Just hearing the stories has recharged our batteries, renewed our optimism and refocused our energy into getting the good news out: Community health activists can enter the public policy arena with confidence, using timeless techniques tested by colleagues from all over the country, and make a difference.

We hope Real Clout serves to both inspire newcomers to engage in the formation of more and better public health policies and lift the spirit and energy of veteran community health activists as we all march, one day at a time, toward the goal of universal health care.

Obligations of Nonprofit Organizations Engaged in Influencing Public Policy

We all pay taxes. Individual citizens pay taxes. Corporate citizens, pay taxes—unless they are organized as a charitable nonprofit 501(c)(3).

Advantages of Being a Not-For-Profit
 Tax-Exempt Organization

Presumably, in an effort to encourage citizens to organize and support private charitable activities, our Founding Fathers, as a matter of policy, passed laws to permit the establishment of tax-exempt charities.

Today organizations that wish to be considered as a nonprofit, tax-exempt, “charitable, educational or scientific organization” apply to the Internal Revenue Service to become incorporated under Section 501(c)(3) of the Tax Code. (Examples of typical charitable organizations incorporated as 501(c)(3)s are fine arts museums, symphony orchestras, teaching hospitals, neighborhood health centers, social service providers, colleges and universities, social and fraternal organizations, consumer protection organizations, civic associations, community development corporations, environmental and conservation groups, and neighborhood improvement associations.)

Organizations approved by the IRS as nonprofit, charitable organizations have no federal income tax obligation.

Tax-exempt nonprofits can also use lower bulk rates at the post office and, in most states, are also exempt from state and local sales and property taxes.

Aside from the tax and bulk mail implications, the chief reason organizations choose to be incorporated as nonprofits is because of the fundraising implications—any contributions to them will be tax deductible, allowing individual donors to reduce their taxable income by the amount of their contribution. Even more important to most nonprofits, most foundations and many other private, corporate, and public funders limit their grant-making to 501(c)(3) organizations.

The Access Project

Appendix A

In return for the favorable tax treatment of nonprofits, Congress has set some obligations and restrictions on 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organizations. They include limitations on their participation in elections, limitations on the amount of organizational resources that can be devoted to lobbying to influence legislation, and limitations on engaging in voter registration activities.

Elections—Limitations on participation

501(c)(3) organizations may not engage in activities supporting or opposing a candidate for public office.

Advocacy organizations who are 501(c)(3) and who wish to engage in electoral activities are advised to find an experienced lawyer to help them incorporate an independent 501(c)(4) organization. That entity can then establish a connected Political Action Committee (or Separate Segregated Fund) to communicate their organizational electoral positions to the general public and contribute to candidates.

Lobbying—Limitations on Expenditures

IMPORTANT NOTE: Lobbying is defined in considerable detail in almost 100 pages of federal regulations in almost plain English, including the definition of what is and what is not “grassroots” lobbying. The most important thing to remember in the definition is that lobbying is defined as influencing the legislative branch’s process of producing legislation. Influencing or participating in the administrative branch’s process of producing administrative policy doesn’t count as lobbying to the IRS.

IRS gives 501(c)(3) organizations the choice of two standards by which their compliance will be measured.

One standard is called the insubstantial part test, and it requires that no substantial part of a charity’s activities be devoted to influencing legislation. (Again we mean legislation—meaning influencing legislators who are considering passing a law.)

The other standard is known as the Section 501(h) expenditure test, which sets specific dollar limits on a charity's activities devoted to influencing legislation. This is calculated as a percentage of a charity's total exempt purpose expenditure — for example, 20% of the first $500,000 and 15% of the next $500,000 and so on. (Again, we mean legislation—meaning influencing legislators who are considering passing a law.)

The experts in the non-profit world recommend that non-profits choose to elect the Section 501(h) expenditure test, because of the ease and unambiguity of the recordkeeping and reporting. The two publications listed below are extremely helpful in helping nonlawyer managers understand how to set up and keep a bookkeeping system to record official lobbying expenditures.

You do not forfeit your rights as an individual citizen to write or contact your representatives to express your opinions. You don't lose your access to free speech when you take a job with a nonprofit. You must, however, not associate yourself with your organization when conveying those opinions.

Fundraising and Private Foundations

There is a general IRS rule that private foundations may not spend a dime on lobbying, and if they do, they will be subject to a penalty tax on their existing donated trust funds. This would not only diminish their trust funds but also certainly discourage any additional donors.

Private foundations have understandably always been cautious about giving to charities with a history of advocacy, never mind lobbying. A major education effort during a 1995 debate in Congress on lobbying by nonprofits and new IRS regulations have loosened things up a bit.

The new IRS regulations make it clear that private foundations may make a general support grant to a "lobbying" nonprofit charity as long as it is not earmarked for lobbying. They may also make a specific project grant when the grantee provides the foundation with projections of both the lobbying and nonlobbying budgets with regard to the specific project.

Federal Grantees—Limitations and Prohibitions

Federal grantees may not use their federal funds for either electioneering or for lobbying federal, state, or local legislative bodies.

Nonprofit charities applying for federal grants will certainly be advised of the restrictions and reporting requirements by the Office of Management and Budget, who will most certainly give them OMB Circular A-122.

Ballot Measures

Statutory Initiatives, Initiative Constitutional Amendments, Referenda Bond Measures and Policy Declarations

The IRS treats ballot measure advocacy as “influencing legislation,” and those rules apply for all 501(c)(3) organizations.

Federal grantees should note that the Office of Management and Budget treats ballot measures as electioneering, in effect prohibiting the use of federal funds to support or oppose a ballot measure.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Judith C. Meredith, President of Meredith and Hall, Inc., founded her own company in 1980 after 10 years of political activity that started as a volunteer lobbyist for her adoptive and foster parent group. Meredith and Hall is a political consulting firm specializing in state legislative advocacy and government relations for low-income people. Her clients include groups of public and private-sector clients, legal services, health and human service advocacy associations, and the City of Boston.

Judy has been a policy advisor, parent organizer, and lobbyist for children's issues in and out of government. She has also served as a national consultant to the Service Employees International Union, the AFL-CIO, and the Public Affairs Division of the United Way of America. In addition, she has served as National Director for a Coalition of Community Foundations for Children and Youth, a national network of local partnerships between United Ways, Community Foundations, and children's advocacy organizations.

Judy has a B.S.Ed. in Home Economics from Framingham State Teacher's College in Massachusetts. Real Clout is her second book. She is also the author of Lobbying on a Shoestring (1984), now in its second edition. This widely used handbook shares an insider's view of lobbying in Massachusetts.

Catherine M. Dunham, Ed.D., is currently a national program director for the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation in collaboration with the Heller Graduate School at Brandeis University. She launched The Access Project, a new initiative of the Foundation to assist community coalitions across the country who are working to improve access to care and coverage for people without health insurance. She also directs the Community Health Leadership Program supported by the Foundation.

From 1984–1991, she was the chief health and human services policy advisor to Governor Michael S. Dukakis of Massachusetts. Prior to that, Cathy was the Executive Director of the Massachusetts Council of Human Service Providers.

She received her Masters in Education and her Doctorate in Social Analysis in Education from Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts. She has faculty appointments at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center and Brandeis University.
